

Assistant/Associate/Full Professor and Program Director of Sport and Fitness Leadership

The School of Arts & Sciences at Johnson University invites applications for a full-time Sport and Fitness Leadership Assistant/Associate/Full Professor and Program Director on the Johnson University-Florida (Kissimmee, Florida) campus beginning Fall 2019 with the potential of beginning in Spring 2019. Successful candidates must possess a graduate degree in Kinesiology or a closely related field (terminal degree preferred), evidence of teaching excellence, and a wholehearted embrace of the University's mission, values and statement of faith.

Responsibilities include leadership of this new and growing program as well as teaching approximately eighteen hours per year primarily in candidate's area of expertise. This could include a variety of kinesiology related courses, related to exercise science, sport management, physical education, and/or sports ministry. Examples include kinesiology, strength training and conditioning, motor learning, anatomy and physiology, sport and exercise psychology, organization and administration of athletic programs, principles of sport marketing, physical education methods, introduction to coaching, and sports ministry models. Priority given to candidates with bilingual (Spanish-English) language skills, as well as proven experience in faith-sport integration and/or sport leadership and administration.

Johnson University

For over 125 years, Johnson University has been a leader among historic faith-based colleges and contemporary fiscally-responsible universities. Johnson is #57 on Forbes "100 Most Financially Fit Colleges," and #3 on Best Value Christian Colleges. The university offers over 70 associate, bachelor's, master's, and Ph.D. programs on our Kissimmee, FL, Knoxville, TN, and online campuses. Johnson's vision to bring glory to God and hope to the world is rooted in our deep historic commitment to the values of Christian community. Successful candidates for faculty positions should be able to articulate how their personal and professional journey demonstrates a vital and growing faith expressed in their teaching, service, and scholarship.
